$998,904

Funds LIFT Wisconsin. Goal is to improve population health by reducing health problems that are fueled by civil legal injustices. The initiative's approach combines technology and community-based programming to address legal problems that are barriers to employment, economic stability and health and well-being. Civic legal issues like child support, consumer and medical debt and evictions, influence economic and employment stability, housing access and poverty, and chronic stress, and impact families and individuals who often don't have the resources to address these issues effectively. This grant team aims to transform the legal aid system, court procedures and the policy environment through community-driven policy and a technology response to make legal services more accessible to Black, Indigenous and People of Color in several counties and statewide. Researchers at the Institute for Research on Poverty leading outcomes and implementation evaluations.

LIFT Wisconsin a technology platform to use existing public data to identify and help fragile middle-class families address civil legal barriers to economic stability and health equity with an ultimate goal of transforming court and policy systems to support total well-being. Community navigators, social service providers, pro bono lawyers, and paralegals will be trained to use the Legal Tune Up platform with workers to increase self-efficacy in self-representation or create efficiencies in civil legal justice representation. The platform will address driver's license suspensions, child support, medical and other debt, record clearing. It will also connect workers with community resources. The project also highlights inequities in existing systems and work towards paradigm shifts to ensure lasting civil legal justice.

Learning Together to Address Long COVID and Equity: Developing an Experience-Based Primary Care Educational Intervention

The overall objective of the pilot is to co-create, implement, and evaluate a "proof of concept" educational intervention for primary care clinicians, using a modified Experience-based Co-design (EBCD) process ("EBCD-catalyst"). The specific aims are: (1) In partnership with patient, community partner, and clinician stakeholders, adapt the evidence-based practice of EBCD to create an EBCD-catalyst educational intervention designed to increase capacity and confidence of providers caring for people with long COVID in primary care clinics; (2) pilot EBCD-catalyst in an urban primary care clinic and measure its effectiveness using pre- post- mixed-methods assessment of provider knowledge, confidence, and self-efficacy and organizational outcomes; (3) evaluate acceptability, appropriateness, and feasibility of the intervention.

LIFT Wisconsin Initial Outcomes Evaluation: Impact of Driver's License Reinstatement

$100,000

A study of outcomes from LIFT Wisconsin's driver's license reinstatement services. Driver's license reinstatement is expected to lead to increased employment and earnings, and thereby greater housing stability and child support payment. The quasi-experimental evaluation will use two methods to identify potential effects: (1) participating individuals will be matched on observable characteristics to non-participating, eligible individuals; (2) we will engage in a difference-in-difference strategy to compare aggregate change in each outcome over time for eligible populations in Dane County to that for eligible individuals in Brown, Milwaukee, and Waukesha counties.

Lawyer's in the Doctor's Office: Partnering to Address Health-Harming Legal Needs

$104,000

Overwhelming evidence demonstrates that socioeconomic factors impact health, leading to deep inequities in health outcomes. Many of these “health-harming social needs” have a legal solution. Yet, 80 percent of the legal needs of people living in poverty go unmet. The health care setting offers patients the safety and privacy to begin conversations and legal issues that might otherwise go unrecognized are identified. This project puts UW law and pre-law students in local health clinics to identify health-harming legal issues patients are facing and provide a spectrum of legal services— preventing legal crises and intervening on active legal issues that place additional financial and health burdens on families.
